From: Paolo Rosi <Paolo.Rosi.217913

Sent: Friday, August 9, 2019 5:36 PM

To: ATR-LitIII-Information (ATR) < ATR.LitIII.Information@ATR.USDOJ.gov>

Subject: ASCAP and BMI Consent Decrees Continue to Serve Small Business Owners

Dear Assistant Attorney General Makan Delrahim,

COMMENTS OF Paolo Rosi, Via vecchia Winery, vintner and co-owner Submitted in Response to the U.S. Department of Justice Antitrust Division's June 5, 2019, Solicitation of Public Comments Regarding the Pro-Competitive Benefits of the ASCAP and BMI Consent Decrees

I respectfully submit these comments as a winery owner from Columbus, Ohio, that licenses music to keep our lights on. I write today to urge the Department of Justice to preserve and protect the proconsumer consent decrees governing the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP) and Broadcast Music, Inc. (BMI).

Together, ASCAP and BMI control nearly ninety percent of the music licensing business, and these decrees serve the public interest by providing essential protections from anti-competitive behaviors. The consent decrees, in particular, prohibit ASCAP and BMI from discriminating against similarly-situated music users; ensure reasonable royalty rates; and require that every business—no matter how large or small—can get a license upon request.

While far from perfect, ASCAP and BMI provide an efficient way for vintner and co-owner to play music while ensuring we compensate the songwriters and copyright holders who create it. Their blanket licenses, made possible by the decrees, underpin the music licensing system. Terminating or sunsetting the decrees would lead to chaos for the entire marketplace, jeopardizing the licensing system as we know it.

This disruption would make my business a place that is less appealing to my customers and therefore impacting my bottom line. Yes. weddings are exempt. I did exclusively weddings apart from six chartiable concerts I hosted for City Music. City Music retained entry tickets and paid for the artists coming to perform. BMI harrassed me and wouldn't listen to my arguments so I bought a license costing $1400/year for six events I only got to sell wine at, for an older crowd, as it was classical music performance, of no more than 60 people a time, on a Sunday afternoon. I kept the license for a few years and then cancelled it. BMI continued to bill me, ignored my letters, and then dealt with me by selling my renewal bill to a collections agency. At that point paid and BMI haven't asked me for any further renewals. Without the decrees in place, the harassment from ASCAP and BMI will only get worse. No. I license from Jamendo instead for background music and pay singer/songwriters artists directly for their original songs. In order to keep paying artists, it is vital that these decrees are not eliminated or sunset.

Many businesses that regularly play and license music already face ongoing challenges when working with ASCAP and BMI. The outcome of terminating the consent decrees would further exacerbate these burdens.

As it stands today, business owners lack access to essential, reliable information about what each performance rights license entails and, as a result, cannot make an informed decision when seeking to license music from any one of the ever-increasing number of music licensing collectives. It is impossible to tailor my licenses based on the needs of my business. I should be able to license with only one licensing organization rather than all of them. Given this long-standing lack of transparency and ASCAP and BMI's reliance on heavy-handed tactics and take-it-or-leave-it demands, many businesses have dropped music altogether. Without the consent decrees, many more businesses would discontinue music, resulting in fewer places across our communities for musicians to perform and decreased songwriter compensation.

In considering the future of the ASCAP and BMI consent decrees, I would like the Justice Department to know that the consent decrees are important because they do not license of needs, but on square footage, which has nothing to do with the music itself nor the use to which I put my building..

Just as the Department of Justice concluded less than three years ago and after a two-year review, the ASCAP and BMI consent decrees continue to be relevant and necessary today and in the future. We ask the Department of Justice to protect our ability to play music, host new and upcoming artists, and ensure these pro-consumer decrees are protected.